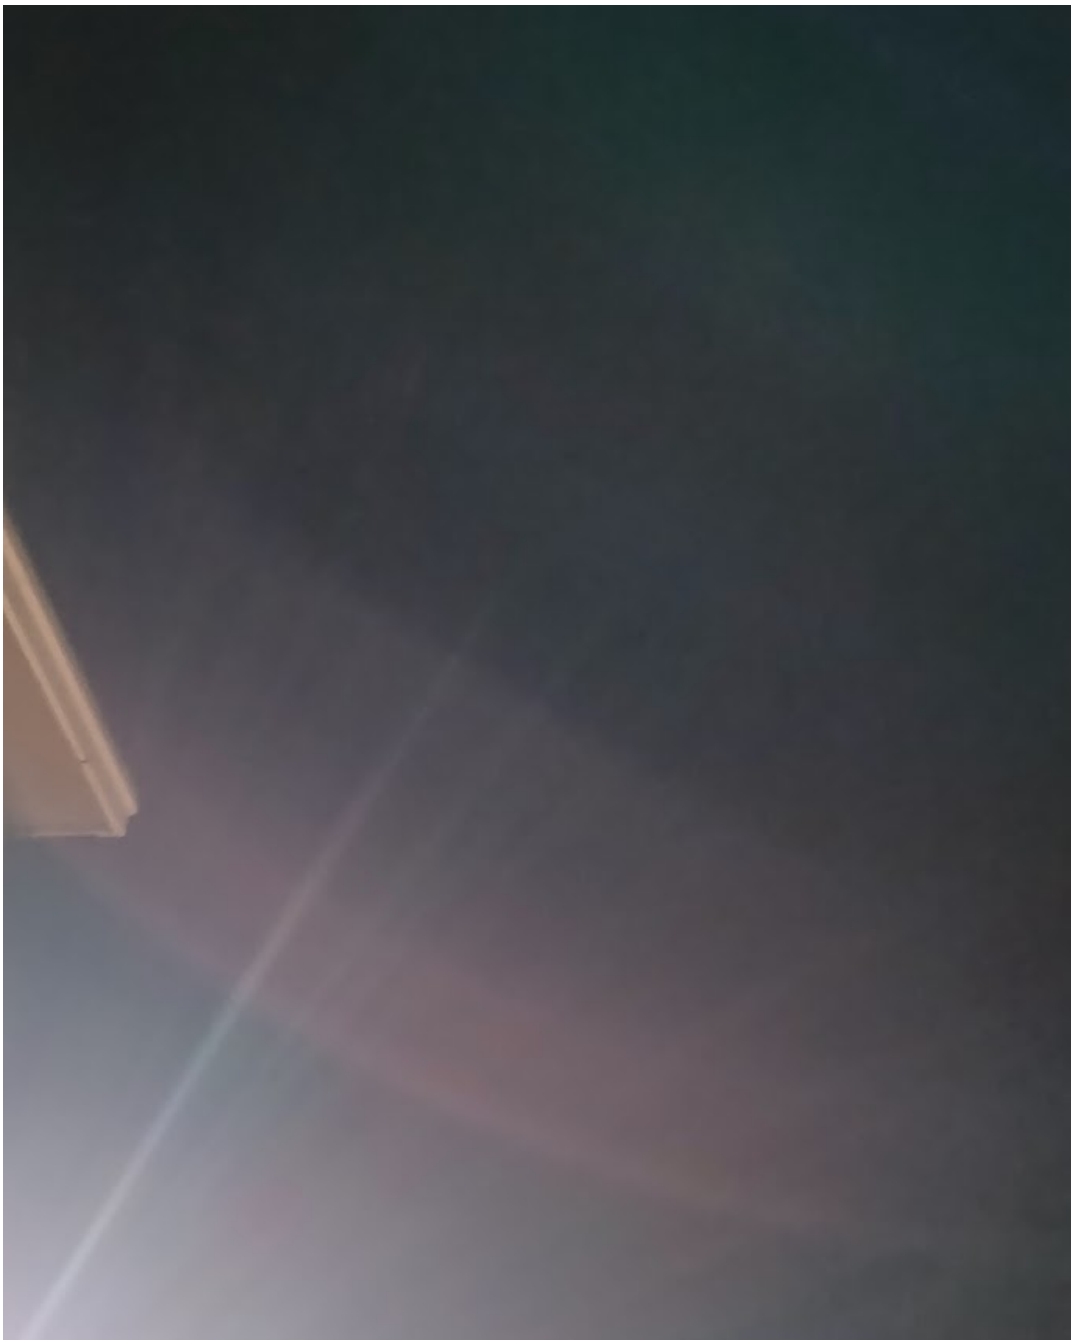
Same Light, Different Night — A Glimpse

These images were taken across different nights and early morning hours using the same outdoor lighting.

At times, the camera records simple flare and reflection. At other times, the light appears as rings, arcs, or suspended forms within the sky.

No conclusions are offered. The images are presented as observed.



The light remains the same.
What changes is how it is seen.